Know Your Bridge

Doubled By Mistake

It Seemed the Natural Thing to Do, But a Little Thought Should Have Revealed the Error

BY WM. E. McKENNEY
Secretary, American Bridge League

If you thoroughly understand any good system of contract bidding, should you be a good player? Not necessarily, unless you know when to deviate from the theories or principles laid down by the system.

Every hand at contract bridge presents a problem in itself. I was interested in the comment given by Mr. P. H. Sims on the following hand after it was played in the American Whist League tournament at Hanover.

NORTH (Dealer): ♠A-Q-J-10 ♥7-4 ♦A-K-Q-7-5 ♣J-3
WEST: ♠K-9-4-2 ♥K-J-10 ♦10-9-6 ♣A-10-4
EAST: ♠None ♥9-8-6-5-3-2 ♦8-4-3-2 ♣9-8-7
SOUTH: ♠8-7-6-5-3 ♥A-Q ♦J ♣K-Q-6-5-2 15

The Bidding

The bidding was unusual and went as follows: South, who was playing a system which opened rather weak, counted his hand for two and one-half tricks and made an opening bid of one spade. Most players, if they wished to open this hand, would bid one club.

West passed and North bid six spades. West reasoned that he certainly ought to take one spade trick and either the ace of clubs or the king of hearts, therefore he doubled.

The Play

The ten of diamonds was opened. Declarer won with the jack, led a spade and took the finesse. He trumped a small diamond and took the second spade finesse.

He now led a club. West won with the ace and returned a diamond. South won in dummy, led another club, won in his own hand, and again took a spade finesse. He now led the ace of spades, picking up West's king, and his contract was made—the losing heart and clubs being discarded on the good diamonds.

You might say that this was a bad break for West. However, in discussing the hand Mr. Sims stated:

"While West cannot be severely criticized for doubling, he should have reasoned that North's jump to six spades put them in a contract that probably no other pair in the room would get to. If they did not make the contract, West would be top score on the board without the double.

"To double would disclose the location of the missing high cards and might give the declarer an opportunity to pick up one, or possibly two, tricks which might otherwise be lost, and West would gain nothing by the double.

"In addition there is always the possibility that the contract can be made—in other words South might have the type of hand that should pass and let North open with one spade—and then have South carry the contract to six."

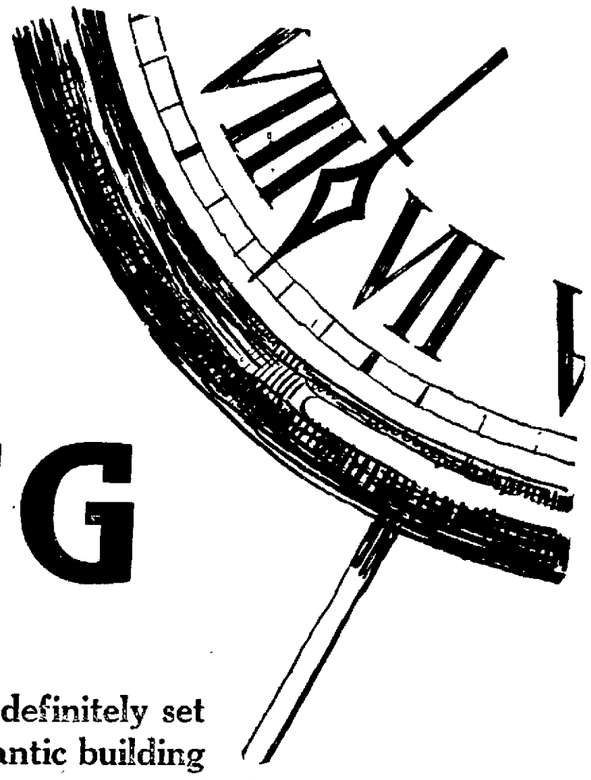
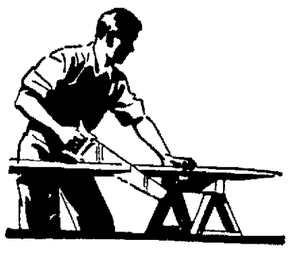
The Pendulum Swings Back to





BUILDING

AS in 1921, the economic recovery which has already very definitely set in will be borne on the broad and brawny back of the gigantic building industry. No other industry, in this community at least, compares with the number of men it employs except paper manufacturing. Running the gauntlet of all parts of the great building industry—general construction, plumbing, heating, electrical and gas, painting and decorating, landscaping, materials and services—men at work in these divisions make up large and valuable payrolls.

A glimpse backward for the six months just ending shows the city has not failed to forge ahead in this classification. Although not a building boom by any means, there has been and is being done more in the building field than one might casually realize. Consider the facts. Have a look at the comparative figures for city building, electrical and plumbing permits:

	1932	1933	Net Gain
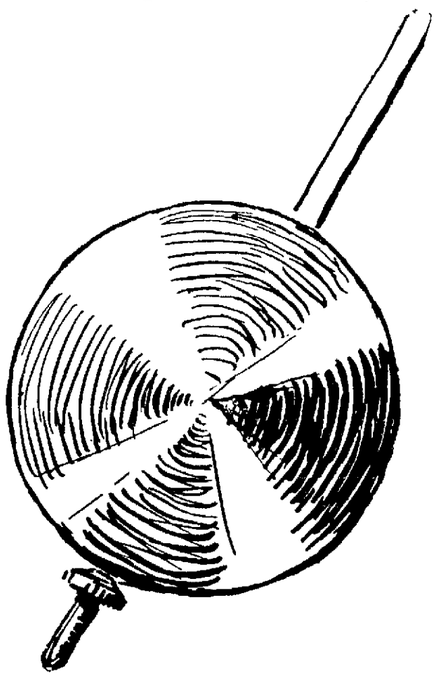
Building	60	70	10
Electrical	44	51	7
Plumbing	21	32	11

Twenty-three active building projects are in the course of construction at the present time. Is this not a record which stimulates confidence?

Try to rent a modern house. Can you find one in the city or in this immediate area? Within the last two weeks, six men with families now residing elsewhere, who would like to reside in this city or community, have sought in vain for residences to rent. They had the assistance of real estate men and others who know the situation. Their quest was fruitless. They went elsewhere.

The Wisconsin Rapids Building & Loan Association, an institution created to aid in home ownership, financing on easy monthly payment bases, has funds to loan for construction purposes. During the coming ninety day period the association could release funds adequate to assure upwards of $40,000 in finished residential construction.



A statement of fact might well be a companion to a prediction. Logic should tell us that there is a definite shortage of houses. Plain thinking should reveal that materials are bound to advance. Industrial activity, sound banking facilities and the public in an optimistic frame of mind build genuine confidence. What is the resultant of all these factors? The answer is our prediction. THE BUILDING INDUSTRY IS COMING BACK and with its return to active proportions will come a new era of community prosperity.

(This message prepared and published without compensation by the WISCONSIN RAPIDS DAILY TRIBUNE, in the interests of the building industry and related businesses and trades.)
